

February 27, 2025 marked a significant milestone for Porterville College Student Services with the grand opening of the new Transfer and Career Resource Center. This centralized hub is designed to empower students by providing comprehensive support for transfer services and career development, ultimately shaping their paths after graduation.

More than just a physical space, the center represents the culmination of dedication, hard work, and vision from numerous individuals committed to student success. It provides students with the essential resources, guidance, and personalized support needed to navigate their academic and career journeys.

For the first time, Porterville College now offers a dedicated space where students can explore transfer opportunities, build resumes, practice mock interviews, and develop job search skills. This holistic approach extends beyond university transfers, focusing on the complete development of every student who walks through its doors. Whether exploring career options, refining goals, preparing for transfer, or seeking individualized counseling, students now have a single, accessible location for these vital services.

Previously, students faced a “maze” of services, navigating between counselors and departments to find the information they needed. Now, the Transfer and Career Resource Center simplifies the process, providing clear direction and access to expert advisors.

The center also serves as a valuable resource for community partners and university representatives, offering a central location to connect with Porterville College students. This streamlined approach fosters stronger connections and enhances opportunities for students.

The resources provided by the center have the potential to significantly benefit both students and the local community, boosting transfer rates and job placements. By empowering students, Porterville College is taking a proactive step towards breaking the cycle of poverty and enhancing the socio-economic well-being of the region.

Key features of the center include dedicated office space for visiting university representatives, enabling one-on-one appointments and demystifying the transfer process. Additionally, workshops, previously scattered across campus, will now be held within the center, creating a convenient and focused learning environment.

The Transfer and Career Resource Center serves as a “one-stop shop” for students, offering streamlined access to counselors and resources to help them achieve their goals. As a proud Latina and product of immigrants, one speaker expressed excitement about the center’s potential to help students with similar stories achieve their dreams.

Porterville College is committed to supporting its alumni, ensuring they continue to have access to valuable resources. The Transfer and Career Resource Center stands as a testament to this commitment, empowering students and alumni alike to achieve their full potential.

The PC Art Gallery Presents: Veiled Voices (The Least of These)

Veiled Voices (The Least of These) is an exhibition featuring reproductions of drawings by Afghan women living under Taliban rule. It will be on display at the Porterville College Art Gallery from March 5 to March 27, 2025, coinciding with Women's History Month. The exhibition highlights the urgent struggle for women's rights and the courage of those who continue to resist systemic oppression.

The exhibition originates from a 2022 collaboration between Porterville College professors Elisa Queenan and Elizabeth Flynn, who encountered these drawings while participating in the EPIC Faculty Fellowship at Stanford University. There, they met Afghan activist Laila Haidari, who had been working directly with women under Taliban rule to document their experiences. Together, Haidari, Queenan, and Flynn developed the idea of Afghan women creating drawings to capture their lived realities. These works—raw, immediate expressions of fear, defiance, and survival—were first exhibited at Stanford and now take on an expanded form at Porterville College.

Curated by Diran Lyons, this exhibition introduces an interactive element: each drawing is veiled beneath black fabric, compelling viewers to lift the coverings in a performative act of defiance against imposed silence. A dual-screen video installation further deepens the experience—one screen remains dark, symbolizing the suppression of women's voices, while the other reveals the testimony of a woman speaking about the realities of life under Taliban rule. This iteration of Veiled Voices introduces a stark confrontation with the brutal realities depicted in the drawings. The images—created by Afghan women who have endured public floggings, stonings, and execution under Taliban rule—do not merely document the atrocities. They remember bodies battered for seeking education, for existing in defiance of patriarchal law.

The conceptual foundation of the exhibition also draws from Kazimir Malevich's Black Square, a work historically tied to radical abstraction and artistic reduction. Here, however, the black fabric does not represent an ending but an obstruction—one that must be actively overcome. The exhibition challenges viewers to consider the intersections of political repression, artistic censorship, and gendered violence, inviting critical reflection on the power structures that determine whose stories are seen and heard.

Veiled Voices (The Least of These) opens March 5 at the Porterville College Art Gallery and runs through March 27. For more information, contact Porterville College Art Gallery Director Theodore Lyons at theodore.lyons@portervillecollege.edu.
